

Help us fight for parks and gardens

The Government is considering removing the Gardens Trust as a statutory consultee in the planning process, putting irreplaceable parks and gardens at increased risk of damage or total destruction.

Each year we receive some 1800 planning application consultations and local planning authorities rely on our advice to help them make good decisions.

The government sees us as a 'blocker' but in reality we have always supported sensitive development, with parks and gardens being essential to our built future.

Without our voice in the planning system, parks and gardens across the country will be at risk. Our small team of staff, Trustees and volunteers are working around the clock to prevent this from happening, but we need your help.
